Woman Thought Murdered Traced to

Eccentric Father Sent to Psychopathic Ward—Police Seek Armenian.

The upper part of the right leg of the young woman whose torso, in two parts, was found in the Hudson River last week was washed ashore from the ocean at Keansburg, N. J., yesterday afternoon.

The leg showed the same skillful use of the saw and knife that characterized the cutting of the torso. It was cut away from the body close to the hip, and the lower cut was just below the knee.

This caused the police to believe the murderer carved his victim into seven parts. The torso was cut into two parts, and it was evident that each leg was cut into two parts, making six. The head would make the seventh.

Unlike the parts of the torso, the leg had no wrappings about it.

The two young men who found the fragment of the leg, Irving Brandler and Norman Carhart, told Coroner H. B. Fay, and this official, after examining the limb, said it was without doubt that of a young woman approximately twenty-five years old, and had been in the water not more than a week.

Clean Amputation.
Dr. Edwin Fields, head surgeon of the Monmouth Memorial Hospital, at Long Branch, made an examination of the thigh at the Red Bank morgue. He said there was a clean amputation with a saw of the thigh in the upper third section at the small trochanter, and another amputation through the leg just below the articulation of the knee joint.

The thigh was fourteen inches long and seven inches wide at the thigh end and five inches wide at the knee end. While preserved to some extent by the salt water, Dr. Fields said it could not have been in the water many days. Detective Charlock, of the staff of Prosecutor Hudspeth of Hudson County, last night said the description of the leg seemed to indicate that it was severed from the torso now lying in Volk's morgue, in Hoboken. Coroner Fay, who ordered the leg taken to Red Bank, gave permission for the Hudson County authorities to take it to Volk's morgue to-day.

Inspector Faurot, who is in charge of the New York detectives working on the case, as soon as he learned of the find, sent two of his men to Keansburg. They had instructions to hire a boat and make an all night search of the shore where the leg was found, in the hope that other parts of the body were there.

Armenian Being Sought.

An effort was made last night to see H. Baloin, an Armenian carpenter who lived with his daughter at No. 2527 Eighth avenue, in order to find out something in regard to the stains which a laundry at the Princess Laundry, Seventh avenue and 147th street, saw on a shirt. But at his home it was said he was away and left no word when he would return. His twenty-year-old daughter, who kept house for him, also was absent. It was said by his neighbors and a brother, who lives at No. 310 East 40th street, that Baloin owned a farm on Staten Island, which was worked by his wife and children. He occasionally visited the farm at night, and had general supervision over it. Early each day it was his habit to return to the city and work as a carpenter. The description of Baloin, it was said, resembles to a degree that of the man who bought the tar paper from Hurwitz, the druggist at 147th street and Eighth avenue.

The stains on the shirt were like those made by blood, but it was said by Baloin when he took the shirt to the laundry that it was "mahogany" stain.

The police are anxious to find the Armenian. Inspector Faurot yesterday said there was little hope of solving the murder until the slain woman's identity was established.

"There is one chance of our solving this mystery to-morrow afternoon," Inspector Faurot said last night. "What this clue is that we are at work on I am not at liberty to say. It looks good."

From a source close to the inspector it was learned that this clue had its origin in the neighborhood of George Sachs's second hand furniture store, at 147th street and Eighth avenue, where

CIGARS A WOMAN'S RIGHT

Miss Lowell Smokes 'Em in Defense of Her Theories.

(By Telegraph to The Tribune.)
Boston, Sept. 10.—Declaring that she was merely putting her theories on woman suffrage to practical use, Miss Amy Lowell, a sister of Dr. Abbott Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard University, and a well known poetess, on the arrival of the Cunard liner Laconia to-day defended her actions in smoking cigars on the trip across.

"I am a suffragette on general principles," said Miss Lowell, "and I firmly believe that women have all the rights and duties of men. If I chose to smoke on the vessel I don't think it was anybody else's business. The men were all smoking, and I would be false to my theories if I did not do so, merely to observe the conventions."

Miss Lowell declared she was unalterably opposed to English militancy. The tactics of the English suffragettes, she contended, were hurting the cause.

SOUGHT HANAN'S DEATH

Machinist Cut Down from Tall Tree in Park.

Joseph Kotimas, twenty-eight years old, a machinist, living at No. 422 East 72d street, attempted suicide last night by hanging himself from a tall tree in Central Park, near 72d street and the West Drive.

A man passing through the drive saw the machinist's body swaying in the wind, and, cutting him down, called for assistance. Patrolman Flood, of the Arsenal station, revived the man, who had evidently just lost consciousness, and summoned an ambulance from the Flower Hospital.

Dr. Whitmarsh took Kotimas to Bellevue Hospital, charged with attempted suicide. Because of the fact that the man, who is a Russian, could speak little English, the police were unable to find out why he desired to take his life.

FAIL TO FIND 'BIG TIM'; SUICIDE IDEA SCOUTED

Report That "Bowery Idol"
Was Found at Smithtown,
L. I., Proves Unfounded.

FRIENDS BECOME ALARMED

Associates, However, Are Confident "Big Fellow," Now Absent 12 Days, Will Come Back Suddenly.

Timothy D. Sullivan, "Big Tim" of the Bowery and Representative in Congress, is still missing. Although he has been gone twelve days from his brother's home in Williamsbridge his friends scout the idea that any harm has come to him or that his infirmity brought him to self-destruction. They believe he is reveling in freedom from the watchfulness of his "cronies" somewhere in Manhattan or in Long Island, and that he will show up as suddenly as he disappeared.

William B. Ellison, "Big Tim's" attorney, and Larry Mulligan, his half brother, got word yesterday that Sullivan was found in the Riverside Inn at Smithtown, Long Island, in the company of Michael Padden, former water register and one of Sullivan's closest friends. They telephoned to Padden and learned there was no truth in the report.

Dr. Herman L. Reis, a Fire Department physician who treated the missing man two years ago, gloomily insisted that "Big Tim" in a relapse of melancholia, committed suicide. Some of the alienists at the Dr. Bond sanitarium, in Yonkers, where the "big fellow" was treated in 1912, maintained that the suicide theory was tenable. Their opinions angered Mr. Ellison, Larry Mulligan, Frank J. Farrell, Emanuel Blumenstiel and other friends of the missing man.

Mr. Mulligan, however, was plainly cast down when he learned from Padden that "Big Tim" really wasn't safe in Padden's care at Smithtown. In spite of their repeated assertions that he was playing pranks and fully appreciated the gravity of his disappearance as a small boy might enjoy eluding his elders, Mr. Mulligan and Mr. Ellison left no stones unturned in running down all clues as to the whereabouts of their friend.

They went to the Prince George Hotel, in East 28th street, last night on a clue furnished by William Galloway, an old night watchman for a firm of Frank Brothers, shoe dealers, of No. 224 Fifth avenue, who said he met "Big Tim" Sunday evening, August 30, in front of the store. Galloway said Sullivan stopped to speak to him and inquired the way to the "St. George Hotel." He said he supposed the "big fellow" meant the Prince George, so he directed him across the avenue and up to 28th street. Galloway said "Big Tim" was wearing a dark suit and a flat brimmed straw hat with a medium sized crown. Mr. Ellison and Mr. Mulligan said the description of the apparel fitted.

At the Prince George they found

THAW HELD IN NEW HAMPSHIRE; SUDDENLY DEPORTED BY CANADA

Lawyers Marshalling on Both Sides for Contest Which Begins at Colebrook To-day
Over Extradition of Matteawan Fugitive.

WILD FLIGHT IN AUTO ENDS IN ARREST

Dragged Shrieking from Detention Room at Coaticook by Armed Immigration Officials, Prisoner Is Hurried
Across Border Into Vermont and Dropped —Acted on Minister's Order.

Harry K. Thaw, who escaped on August 17 from the Matteawan Asylum for the Criminal Insane and fled to Canada, was deported yesterday morning by immigration officials of the Dominion, and is now a prisoner at Colebrook, N. H., where he is held pending the arrival of extradition papers from Albany.

Taken from the jail at Coaticook, Quebec, despite his vigorous resistance and the fact that writs of habeas corpus and prohibition were issued several days ago on which a hearing was set for Monday in Montreal, Thaw was driven to Norton Mills, Vt., where he entered Canada, and there set free.

Making a wild dash in an automobile to get out of Vermont, the officials of which he considered hostile to him, the fugitive at last reached New Hampshire, only to fall into the hands of the same sheriff who apprehended him two days after his flight from Matteawan.

Lawyers are being marshalled for the contest that is expected to ensue over his extradition and in which the dual governorship in New York is likely to become an important issue. A report from New Hampshire says that Governor Felker is inclined to recognize Governor Sulzer.

Minister Doherty, of Canada, assumes full responsibility for Thaw's sudden deportation.

Attorney General Carmody says the immigration officials acted in bad faith, having promised Mr. Jerome to take no steps without giving him timely notice.

SLAYER OF WHITE INCOHERENT AND BEWILDERED ON JOURNEY

(From a Staff Correspondent of The Tribune.)
Colebrook, N. H., Sept. 10.—Harry K. Thaw slept a prisoner in the United States to-night for the first time since his escape from the Matteawan Asylum for the Criminal Insane on August 17 and flight to Canada.

He was dragged out of the immigration rooms at Coaticook, Quebec, this morning at 8 o'clock by Canadian immigration inspectors sent especially for the job, thrust into an automobile filled with armed Dominion police and followed by a second car, also filled with armed officers, and rushed to the border at Norton Mills, Vt., where he was dropped. The writ of habeas corpus and the writ of prohibition, by both of which it was ordered that Thaw be produced in Montreal on Monday, were overridden by the immigration people, who were acting under specific orders from J. C. Doherty, Minister of Justice and acting Minister of the Interior.

Thrust unexpectedly over the Canadian border, Thaw was for three hours a free man, and in that time drove madly in an automobile for fifty futile miles through the hills of Vermont and New Hampshire. Near noon he ran into the arms of a New Hampshire sheriff and was brought to Colebrook, where he retained counsel to resist extradition.

Jerome on the Ground.

William Travers Jerome's two-car special train rolled into the station at 11:35 o'clock to-night. It carried two passengers, Jerome and Franklin Kennedy, Deputy Attorney General of New York. Mr. Jerome went into immediate consultation with Bernard Jacobs, legal adviser to Sheriff Drew.

"I do not know what the next step will be," Mr. Jerome said. "I am busy to-night learning just what has happened. This came as a complete surprise to me. Let me sleep on it and perhaps I can say more to-morrow."

Mr. Jerome will assume charge of the case for New York State, seeking to have Thaw, a ward of the state, returned to Matteawan. Fearing kidnapping at the hands of officers from New York, Thaw asked for a special guard, an. Chief of Police Kelley swore in twelve special deputies, all armed. They were patrolling the streets about Thaw's hotel to-night.

Judge R. N. Chamberlin, of the Superior Court, will hear the applications of Thaw's lawyers for a writ of habeas corpus at 9:30 o'clock to-morrow morning. Application for the writ was first made this afternoon, but the judge, being occupied with another case, said he could not then consider it.

The fugitive has telegraphed lawyers far and near and purposes to fight the return to Matteawan to the bitter end. He is afraid of Jerome, however, and when he heard that his former prosecutor was coming, asked for the special guards. L. J. Vorhaus, of New York City, who, it is said, will conduct the battle against extradition, arrived to-night from Fabyans, N. H. T. R. E. McInnes, of Ottawa, one of the framers of the Canadian immigration laws under which Thaw was so unceremoniously deported, also is here. He had arrived at Coaticook, Que., to-day to consult with Thaw as associate counsel only to learn his client was gone. He denounced the deportation as contempt of court and said that proceedings had been instituted to punish those who participated in Thaw's removal.

Thaw Issues Statement.

Thaw himself issued this statement to-night:

"What occurred under the English flag this morning is something I can't discuss, but we believe good Canadians will do what is right. Now I have come to New Hampshire, but only on my difficult way home to Pennsylvania. There is no honest legal charge against me, and we trust New Hampshire won't accept any subterfuge from a few officials of a larger state. We hope citizens of New Hampshire who won't be bluffed will write the Governor."

Mr. Doherty's action was in execution of the deportation order issued by the board of inquiry on Friday. An appeal was taken from this order by Thaw's lawyers to Doherty. They rested in the belief that he would take no action until the court writs were decided, but Doherty went ahead regardless of the courts.

Thaw's removal from the immigration quarters at Coaticook was sudden and dramatic. Three mysterious men, who said they represented Minister Doherty, appeared. Thaw was asleep. They woke him up, commanded him to dress and after a struggle took him to the border. Thaw screamed as they brought him down the stairway. "Don't let them kidnap me!" he cried. "Save me, for God's sake!"

For a time he refused to dress. Finally he calmed down, his brain-storm leaving him weak and submissive. He dressed and allowed himself to be taken to the waiting automobile. The move had come without warning, not even Thaw's lawyers expecting it. The result was that Thaw was whisked away through Coaticook's almost deserted streets with hardly any one the wiser. The automobile was sent at the highest speed permitted by the rough roads to the towns of Stanhope, Que., and Norton Mills, Vt., which stand hand in hand on the border.

Bewildered at Liberty.

Under the command of Sergeant Littlefield the car was driven over the line. The door was opened and Thaw was pushed out. He hopped about like a dazed canary shooed out of its cage. There was not a soul to meet him, for the move was as complete a surprise to Thaw's foes as it was to himself. It was 8:55 o'clock when he set his feet once more on American soil. Norton Mills is a hamlet of only three hundred or four hundred inhabitants, and few of them were about the town.

In the absence of such guiding counsel as he has grown accustomed to in the last five years, with no one to lean upon, he marked for himself the erratic path of his automobile journey out of Vermont and into New Hampshire, which ended with his detention to-night in a Colebrook hostelry. The circumstances of the journey were curiously moulded.

Within a few minutes after Thaw had been hurried from Coaticook toward the Vermont border by the Canadian immigration authorities two newspaper representatives followed in another

2 KILLED ON DESTROYER

Boiler of Craven Explodes—
Three Others May Die.

(By Telegraph to The Tribune.)
Savannah, Ga., Sept. 10.—Two men were killed and three others were so badly scalded and burned that they may die, when a boiler of the torpedo boat destroyer Craven burst at sea this afternoon. The dead are Chief Water Tender McCaffrey and Water Tender Milton.

The accident occurred early this afternoon, while the destroyer was off Tybee, on the way from Charleston to this port. The pilot boat Estill was the first to reach the disabled craft. Then the tug Cynthia II came up and towed the Craven to Fort Scriven, where the injured received medical attention.

No statement as to the cause of the accident has been given. McCaffrey in his delirium called constantly: "Low water! Low water!" which leads to the belief that the water in the boiler was allowed to get too low. D. B. Smith, a water tender, risked his life to go to the rescue of his imprisoned mates. Twenty-five tubes blew out, but the boat is not otherwise damaged.

The destroyer is in charge of Ensign W. D. Lamont. It is probable that an official investigation will be made.

MAYOR LUNN MUST EXPLAIN

Summoned by Judge Whose Injunction He Ignored.

Schenectady, N. Y., Sept. 10.—County Judge Daniel Naylor, Jr., issued an order to-day for Mayor George R. Lunn to appear before a special session of the Supreme Court here next Monday to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court in cutting down a tree when an injunction was in force against the destruction of trees on a street where Mayor Lunn used the axe.

Judge Naylor has been repeatedly attacked by Mayor Lunn, and to-day's action was taken by attorneys for the complainant to spare him embarrassment in passing on the case.

U. S. SOLDIER A PEER

Lord De Freyne's Death Brings
Title to A. R. French.

London, Sept. 10.—Baron De Freyne, at one time colonel of the 5th Battalion, Connaught Rangers, died to-day. He was born in 1855.

Lord De Freyne's son and heir, the Hon. Arthur Reginald French, disappeared from London in January, 1905. It was found a month later that he had resigned his commission in the British army and had enlisted in New York as a private in the 8th United States Infantry.

The new peer is a graduate of Sandhurst, the British West Point, and was born in 1879. Before enlisting in the United States Army he was a lieutenant of the Royal Fusiliers. The De Freyne estates consist of some thirty thousand acres in County Roscommon, Ireland.
